Tips from graduate students

Some of the best advice comes from the students who have already experienced the journey.

Evan's advice

"Make your graduate program work for where you are now and where you want to go. One of the best parts of graduate school is how leverageable it is, not just for your aspirations, but for what you're involved with beyond the classroom. I was really lucky to study international affairs and leadership online while I was in a job that required me to fly around the world several times a year. My master's program positively influenced my international work, while my international work enhanced my learning experience. ASU makes sure you have truly wonderful staff and faculty to help make you as successful as possible. Lean on them!"

Priscilla's advice

"As you begin your graduate journey at ASU, ask questions, find your community and make time for yourself. I chose ASU because the psychology department came highly recommended, and the flexibility of the online program made it a great fit for me as someone who works full time. Building relationships with classmates can make all the difference, both academically and personally. Stay ahead of deadlines, and take advantage of the support and resources around you. Make space to learn, recharge, connect with others and enjoy the journey."
